FEATURES

10 USS QUINCY: SHE DIED SO THAT OTHERS COULD CARRY ON THE FIGHT
One of the proudest ships in the US Navy's pre-war Fleet, the Quincy immediately went into action following the Japanese sneak attack on Pearl Harbor / by Robert J. Cressman

24 BIRTH OF THE AMERICAN BATTLESHIP
Soon after the turn of the last century, the USA abandoned a policy of isolationism and embarked on a building program, which ultimately led to supremacy on the world’s oceans / by Jon M. Nielson

38 “GET THE RUMMERS!”
It was an always-frustrating, often-bizarre battle that the US Coast Guard waged for 14-years against the rum runners in an effort to enforce the highly unpopular 18th Amendment / by Philip L. Jewett

48 “THIS TERRIBLE WEAPON WILL DESTROY THE WORLD”
Edmund Zalinski’s huge dynamite gun using compressed air to silently spew out shells packed with hundreds of pounds of dynamite was capable of blowing up whole neighborhoods from miles distant / by J. David Truby

DEPARTMENTS

4 MUSEUM NEWS
Latest global preservation news / by Mike Samms

5 SEA MAIL
News and views from Sea Classics readers

6 INTEL FILE
Discovery of the USS Indianapolis / Staff Report

22 LOST AT SEA
Our photo feature of ships in distress / by Susan Duprey

34 YOUR NAVY
Latest US Navy photographs from the service’s best photojournalists / by Howard Carter

COVER: Magnificent photograph of the USS Connecticut (BB-18) undergoing full-speed trials during October 1906 when she was the most advanced ship in the US Navy as the service became a global power with its new generation of battleships. (National Archives)

THIS PAGE: Super Hornets, a Seahawk, and a Hawkeye overfly the USS George H.W. Bush (CVN-77) during an airpower demonstration in the Atlantic Ocean on 10 August. (USN/Matt Matlage)